copyrighted work."

I.

I understand that Cisco Systems, Inc. ("Cisco" or "Plaintiff") has alleged that certain of its U.S. copyrights ("copyrights-at-issue") have been infringed by Arista Networks, Inc. ("Arista" or "Defendant"), as asserted in the Second Amended Complaint for Copyright and Patent Infringement in this matter ("the Complaint"). These copyrights principally concern "command line interfaces" ("CLIs"), which are user interfaces implemented in software, as discussed in Section III, below. I further understand that Arista's defenses include, among others, a claim that any use it may have made of Cisco's asserted copyrights constitutes "fair use" under U.S. copyright law. In determining whether use of a copyright is fair use, four statutory factors are considered;² other non-statutory factors may also be considered. I have been retained by Arista to provide, among other things, my opinions regarding the fourth statutory fair-use factor, "the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the Section II of this report discusses my qualifications.

Section III of this report provides background information on the copyrights-at-issue, the parties, Cisco's allegations, and other information pertinent to my analyses.

Section IV of this report provides my opinions relating to the fourth statutory fair-use factor. My opinions at this time are based on an independent examination of documents and other discovery produced in this case, conversations with Arista personnel and independent experts,³ and certain third party sources as disclosed in my report text and Appendix A.

Section V discloses information on my compensation for services.

I understand that discovery, including expert discovery, is ongoing, and information may yet become available that will bear on my final opinions. To the extent additional relevant information comes to light, including but not limited to supplemental productions from the parties, reports from either party's expert(s), rulings from the Court and any additional materials produced through discovery or otherwise made available, I may amend or supplement my opinions as necessary and permitted by the Court.⁴

This report has been prepared in connection with the above referenced case. The report is to be used for the specific purposes of this litigation and is not to be used for any other purpose without my express written consent and that of Ocean Tomo.

³ To date, I have spoken with consultant William Seifert, consultant John Black, and Arista Chief Financial Officer Ita Brennan.

⁴ I understand that Cisco has not yet produced financial data for its products that include the copyrights-at-issue. I respectfully reserve the right to amend or supplement my opinions in this report once such data has been produced.

II. QUALIFICATIONS INCLUDING PUBLICATIONS AND TESTIMONY

I am a Managing Director for Ocean Tomo, a firm that provides financing, asset and risk management, merger and acquisition consulting, expert services in litigation and valuation of intellectual capital. I have been a consultant on intellectual property and corporate finance matters since 1990. Prior to its acquisition by Ocean Tomo, I served as the Principal in charge of the Intellectual Property and Dispute Services Practice of Tait Advisory Services LLC. Until November 2001 I was a Partner for PricewaterhouseCoopers, L.L.P. I had previously served in various positions for one of its predecessor firms, Coopers & Lybrand, ultimately serving as National Director for Trademark and Copyright Matters. From 1990 to 1992 I was a manager for Ernst & Young.

Before 1990 I had over eleven years of industry experience in financial, marketing and accounting management positions for entertainment, retail and consumer products companies. My positions included Chief Financial Officer for Cleveland's Playhouse Square Center, Senior Corporate Sales and Marketing Analyst for Dayton Hudson Corporation's Target Stores Division (now Target Corporation), Manager of Financial and Strategic Planning for Aveda Corporation (now a division of Estée Lauder) and Chief Operating Officer for Sign Consultants, Inc.

I have experience developing strategies and participating in negotiations for the purchase, sale and licensing of ongoing businesses and tangible and intangible assets, both as a consultant and in my positions in industry. I am a Certified Licensing Professional and a Certified Management Accountant. I am also a member of the Licensing Executives Society and the International Trademark Association, for whom I served three consecutive terms on the editorial board of The Trademark Reporter. I am a past member of the Board of Governors for the Brand Name Education Foundation and a current member of the American Marketing Association. I hold a Bachelor of Arts degree from Oberlin College and a Master of Arts degree in Business from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

My professional publications within the past ten years and a list of cases in which I have previously provided oral testimony are included in Appendix B to this report.

BACKGROUND

III.

A. Understanding of Legal Standards

I understand that the U.S. Copyright Act gives authors exclusive rights over some, but not all, uses of their copyrighted works. As the Supreme Court has stated:

The limited scope of the copyright holder's statutory monopoly, like the limited copyright duration required by the Constitution, reflects a balance of competing claims upon the public interest: Creative work is to be encouraged and rewarded, but private motivation must ultimately serve the cause of promoting broad public availability of literature, music, and the other arts.⁵

Thus, I understand that "[t]he fair use doctrine 'permits and requires courts to avoid rigid application of the copyright statute when, on occasion, it would stifle the very creativity which that law is designed to foster."

I further understand that fair use is an affirmative defense against copyright infringement, meaning that if the use of copyrighted materials qualifies as fair use there is no infringement.⁷ In determining whether the use made of a copyrighted work is a fair use, factors to be considered include:

- 1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes;
- 2) the nature of the copyrighted work;
- 3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and
- 4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work.⁸

These four statutory factors must be considered "to determine whether the public interest in the free flow of information outweighs the copyright holder's interest in exclusive control over the work." I understand that these four factors are not exhaustive, however, and that courts may consider other factors as well. I further understand that these factors are to be viewed "as guidelines for 'balancing the equities,' not as 'definitive or determinative' tests."

⁵ Twentieth Century Music Corp. v. Aiken, 422 U.S. 151, 156, 95 S. Ct. 2040, 2044, 45 L. Ed. 2d 84 (1975).

⁶ Seltzer v. Green Day, Inc., 725 F.3d 1170, 1175 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 577 (1994)).

⁸ 17 U.S.C. § 107.

¹¹ Dr. Seuss Enters., L.P. v. Penguin Books USA, Inc., 109 F.3d 1394, 1399 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted).

My analysis in this report considers the fourth statutory factor, which focuses on the impact of the alleged infringement on the copyright owner's (here, Cisco's) ability to exploit its original work. I understand that such an analysis must consider two general questions:

- Whether the defendant's use has significantly harmed the copyright owner's market for the original work. This is a fact-specific inquiry that determines what harm has already occurred.¹²
- Whether "unrestricted and widespread" use by others would adversely affect the potential market for the original work.¹³ This requires an assessment to determine what type of impact widespread use would have on the original work's market.¹⁴

In considering whether and to what extent harm has occurred or may occur, I understand that courts will often consider whether the defendant's use amounts to mere duplication of the entirety of an original such that it clearly supersedes the object of the original and serves as a market replacement for it. If further understand that the commercial nature of the use is an element to be considered under this factor, but is not necessarily decisive. If I also understand that "the importance of this [fourth] factor will vary, not only with the amount of harm, but also with the relative strength of the showing on the other factors." Some courts have held that, where a defendant's work is comprised of substantially more than the allegedly infringing material, "the relevant market effect is that which stems from defendant's use of plaintiff's 'expression,' not that which stems from defendant's work as a whole." Additionally, I understand that if the defendant's use is found to be 'transformative,' market substitution is less certain, and market harm cannot be inferred.

Finally, I understand that the issues affecting this fourth factor may overlap, in some respects, with Cisco's allegations of market impact in support of its alleged copyright damages and Arista's responses to those allegations. To my knowledge, Cisco has not yet presented any analysis or other disclosure of such an alleged impact. I am addressing these issues here proactively, and respectfully reserve the right to respond to any such analysis or evidence if and as presented by or on behalf of Cisco. Insofar as the issues overlap, my responses to Cisco's allegations of market impact (assuming Cisco makes such allegations) may also be relevant to the fourth fair use factor.

B. The Parties

1. Cisco

Cisco Systems, Inc. ("Cisco") was incorporated on December 10, 1984 and is headquartered in San Jose, CA.²⁰ The company designs, manufactures, and sells Internet protocol-based networking and other products related to the communications and information technology industry. Cisco groups its products and technologies into various categories, including Switching, Next-Generation Network (NGN) Routing, Collaboration, Service Provider Video, Data Center, Wireless, Security, and other products. These products, primarily integrated by Cisco's Internetwork Operating System ("IOS") software, link geographically dispersed local-area networks (LANs), metropolitan-area networks (MANs) and wide-area networks (WANs).²¹

2. Arista

Arista Networks, Inc. ("Arista") was founded in November 2004 and is headquartered in Santa Clara, CA. The company delivers software-driven cloud networking solutions for large data center and computing environments. Its products include network switches that it uses to build scalable data centers for approximately 3,500 customers worldwide. Arista's Extensible Operating System ("EOS") network operating system runs on all its products.

C. Relevant Products and Features

1. Networking Equipment

a. Routers

Routers are devices that connect networks, thereby linking computers to the Internet. The router directs data packets from one router to another through the network until it reaches its destination.²⁵ The router directs data packet traffic by choosing the best path for information to travel so that it is received quickly.

Cisco is the world's leading producer of network routers. Its competitors include Juniper and 3Com, among others.²⁶ Arista does not produce routers.

²⁶ Frost & Sullivan, World Enterprise Router Markets, 2006, p. 1-12.

b. Network Switches

Network Switches serve as controllers that enable networked devices to communicate with each other efficiently, sharing information and allocating resources. Many businesses use network switches to connect computers, printers and servers within a building or office campus.²⁷ Managed network switches are configurable and provide more flexibility and capacity since they allow for management locally or remotely. In comparison, unmanaged network switches do not have to be configured and there is less effort needed for installing or setting up the switch. However, unmanaged switches do not have as much network capacity. Managed switches tend to be used for business networks while unmanaged switches tend to be used for home networking equipment.²⁸

Cisco is the world's leading producer of managed network switches. Its competitors for switches include HP, Huawei, Juniper, Dell, Arista and others. Data from Crehan Research and IDC Research for 2015 shows the following revenue market shares for the total worldwide Ethernet switches and for high-speed Ethernet data center switches (excluding Blade):29,30

Vendor	Total Ethernet Switches	High-Speed Ethernet Data Center Switches
Cisco	60.7%	64.6%
HP	9.0%	6.7%
Huawei	4.5%	N/A
Juniper	3.7%	4.3%
Arista	3.1%	10.0%
Dell	N/A	1.9%
All Other	19.0%	12.5%

²⁷ https://www.cisco.com/cisco/web/solutions/small business/resource center/articles/connect employees and offices/what_is_a_network_switch/index.html.

³¹ Dell's share is included under "All Other" for Total Ethernet Switches, but broken out for High-Speed Ethernet Data Center Switches.

- Resiliency the multi-process state-sharing architecture results in higher availability, reduced maintenance windows, improved manageability, and tighter security.
- Programmability and Extensibility EOS offers a rich set of programmable interfaces that allow the EOS to be programmable across all layers. This enables rapid integration with a wide range of third-party applications.
- Network Services A comprehensive suite of networking services to address network virtualization, application and visibility, telemetry, SDN controller integration, and automation. One such network services is a smart system upgrade that delivers software updates to the network in a non-disruptive way.

As discussed below, Cisco and Arista also receive requests for proposal (or similar documents) from customers that specify a number of features that the customer requires or desires in a network switch.

³² CSI-CLI-00022947.

c. Other Networking Equipment

There are many different types of networking equipment beyond switches and routers. For example, Cisco sells server, security, hyper-converged infrastructure, and video products.³⁴ I understand a number of Cisco's other products, sold independent of its switches, use CLIs. For example, Cisco's firewall security product, ASA 5500, uses an operating system that is not the same as Cisco IOS but nonetheless utilizes a CLI with "similar syntax and other conventions to the Cisco IOS CLI." ³⁵

2. Network Operating Systems

A network operating system is a type of software that allows networks to be managed and monitored. These operating systems can be embedded in networking devices such as routers and switches, and allow for a variety of networking functions, such as file and print sharing among multiple computers, account administration for users, data backup, security, and sharing of data among users.³⁶ Different companies offer different network operating systems. A sample of these are listed below:

- Internetwork Operating System ("IOS"), used in Cisco routers and switches³⁷
- HP ProVision and ComWare, used in HP networking products³⁸
- Junos, used in Juniper Networks routers and switches³⁹
- Versatile Routing Platform ("VRP"), used in Huawei routers and switches⁴⁰
- Extensive Operating System ("EOS"), used in Arista switches⁴¹
- Fabric OS ("FOS"), used in Brocade Communications switches⁴²

A multitude of discrete services and features are provided by network operating systems.

Subsequently, a breakdown of these primary components illustrates that there is significantly more detail within each of these infrastructure components.⁴⁴

a. Command Line Interfaces ("CLIs")

Command Line Interfaces, or CLIs, are used by human operators, and sometimes by computer programs, to interface with network devices. For networking equipment, a CLI is an interface that uses a set of commands and underlying code to communicate with, configure and manage network operating systems.⁴⁷ These commands are a way of interacting with a computer's operating system, program or application, in which the user responds to a visual prompt by typing in a command on a specified line, receives a response back from the system, and then enters another command, etc.⁴⁸ I understand that, for some customers, CLIs may be used most frequently to configure switches upon installation, and less frequently after the initial configuration is complete.⁴⁹ In other cases, even during the configuration phase, other methods may be used such as a Graphical User Interface ("GUI").⁵⁰

CLIs were the primary way of interacting with most computer systems into the 1980s. Beginning in the 1980s and continuing to the present, CLIs have not been widely used by consumer computer users due to the emergence of easier-to-use GUIs.⁵¹ However, CLIs are still used with business computers and networking systems, most often by programmers and system operators. I understand that the degree to which CLIs are used with network switches varies depending on the type of customer and the individual customer's preferences.⁵² According to Arista, these types of customers include, but are not limited to, web customers, high performance computing customers, and enterprise customers, each with varying levels of preference for CLIs.⁵³

A CLI is comprised of syntax (the grammar that a command must follow) and semantics (the operations that are possible and the definition of the syntax).⁵⁴ Within network operating systems, vendors define a set of rules that provide for executable commands used in configuring, maintaining, and monitoring equipment and network operations.⁵⁵

b. Cisco CLI Command Modes and Hierarchy

According to Cisco, the specific commands available to a user of its IOS are dependent on which of three "command modes" the user is working in.⁵⁶ There are also "submodes" that provide subsets of the commands available in a specific mode.

⁴⁷ Second Amended Complaint, p. 2.

⁴⁹ Conversation with John Black. I understand this is similar for routers, with respect to which one analyst has stated that "[t]he CLI is usually only needed when the router is first installed, or if a major change is required, so regular maintenance can usually be performed by lower level technicians using the GUI interface." Frost & Sullivan, World Enterprise Router Markets, 2006, p. 1-13.

- Privileged EXEC mode In order to access all commands, a user must enter Privileged ii. EXEC mode, which typically requires a password.
- Global configuration mode This mode is accessed from the privileged EXEC mode iii. and allows the user to enter commands that configure general system characteristics and make changes to a running configuration.
- iv. Specific/Interface configuration mode – This is a submode that is accessed from the global configuration mode and allows a user to enter a variety of protocol-specific or feature-specific configuration modes.
- Subinterface configuration mode This is a submode accessed from a specific v. configuration mode and used for the configuration of specific features within the scope of a given specific configuration mode.
- ROM Monitor mode This is a separate mode used when the router cannot boot vi. properly; it can only be accessed by interrupting the boot sequence during startup.

The figure below illustrates an example of Cisco's CLI command hierarchy:⁵⁷

⁵⁷ http://www.cisco.com/E-Learning/bulk/public/tac/cim/cib/using_cisco_ios_software/02_cisco_ios_hierarchy.htm.

Cisco IOS Command Hierarchy

I understand from Mr. Black that the code used to implement CLIs (i.e. to parse and interpret the received commands) represents a small portion of a network operating system, as discussed further in this report in Section IV.A.2.b below.

D. Registered Copyrights & Copyrights-at-Issue

Cisco alleges that Arista has copied portions of works covered by a total of 26 registered and pending copyrights.⁵⁸ Cisco claims that these copyrights cover the IOS, IOS XR, IOS XE (hereinafter, collectively, "IOS") and NX-OS software used with Cisco routing and switching products.⁵⁹ The registered copyrights purport to cover "new and revised computer code" and (in many cases) "associated documentation," with registration dates ranging from June 2002 to November 2014. They exclude from the material in which copyright is being claimed "[p]rior works by claimant [or in some cases "previously published material"] and preexisting third party computer code." A summary of the 16 asserted registered copyrights is as follows:

I understand Cisco asserts that, collectively, these copyrights (registered and application pending) cover the entirety of Cisco's IOS and NX-OS operating systems, as well as certain associated documentation, apart from unclaimed prior works and preexisting third party computer code. I further understand that Cisco is not alleging that Arista has copied the totality of Cisco's IOS or NX-OS operating systems, or anything close to it. Rather, Cisco is asserting that Arista has copied approximately 514 of Cisco's CLI commands (or command fragments); certain of Cisco's command hierarchies, command modes, and command prompts; certain command responses; and certain portions of Cisco's documentation (collectively, copyrights-at-issue).⁶²

E. Arista's Alleged Use of the Copyrights-at-Issue

1. Arista Products

Cisco alleges that portions of the copyrights-at-issue are incorporated into Arista's network switches and portions of Arista's documentation.⁶³ Cisco and Arista switches both compete for certain customers and types of business functions; however, the products and services offered by the two companies vary in a number of material respects.

.65 The Arista EOS architecture separates the processes associated with EOS from the system database ("SysDB"), and runs on top of the Linux core or kernel. The EOS Architecture includes additional components such as Hardware Abstraction Layer and a suite of Network Services. The figure below includes a breakdown of the Arista EOS Architecture into its features and services components:66

⁶² For ease of discussion throughout this report, I will simply use the term "CLI commands" to reference the command words, command hierarchies, command modes and command prompts associated with a CLI.

2. Alleged Infringement

According to Cisco, the "key components" Arista is alleged to infringe relate to "at least 500 multi-word commands" from Cisco's IOS and NX-OS CLIs.⁶⁷ As noted earlier, I understand that the allegedly infringing elements cover these CLI "multi-word commands"; certain CLI command hierarchies, command structures, command modes, and command prompts; certain command responses; and certain portions of Arista's documentation. I understand that Cisco does not allege that Arista copied any of its IOS or NX-OS software source code, including the source code underlying the CLI—only Cisco's publicly available materials.⁶⁸

⁶⁷ Second Amended Complaint, p. 13.

⁶⁸ Id., pp. 7-9.

allegedly copied commands and command fragments also represent approximately 5% or less of the total Arista CLI commands.

F. Others' Use of the Copyrights-at-Issue

I understand that many Ethernet switch vendors besides Arista use CLIs that substantially overlap with Cisco's IOS CLI. For example, I understand that Nortel has publicly stated that it uses a "Cisco-like" CLI, and that vendors including HP, Dell, IBM, Brocade, Alcaltel Lucent, and others have stated in their public product literature that they use an "industry standard" CLI, which includes many terms in common with Cisco's IOS CLI.⁷¹ Numerous third-party sources, including for example Network World magazine, have also observed that many switch vendors copy portions and/or aspects of Cisco's CLI.⁷²

I further understand that a Cisco officer has publicly stated, with specific reference to the CLI, that vendors including HP, Brocade, Alcatel Lucent, and Extreme "have innovated on their own, rather than copy, to create value and interoperability for their customers." Thus, Cisco apparently contends that the amount of overlap between these vendors' CLIs and Cisco's does not create significant value for customers relative to other switch features.

⁷¹ The term "industry standard" is often used in the same sense as "Cisco-like," including by Cisco itself, as discussed further in report Section IV.C.1.b and Section IV.C.2 below.

IV. OPINIONS EXPRESSED

Opinion Summary

I have evaluated currently available evidence in this matter and concluded that it fails to support a contention that Arista's alleged infringement has harmed the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work as owned and employed by Cisco. Therefore, it is my opinion that the fourth factor weighs in favor of a finding of fair use. I have made the following observations and reached the following conclusions in forming my opinion:

- A. Cisco's CLI commands, including the CLI commands at issue, are not independently transacted. These CLI commands represent a small part of the switching products in which they are employed.
 - 1) Neither the CLI commands at issue nor the operating systems of which they are a part are independently transacted.

I have seen no evidence to suggest Cisco has offered the CLI commands at issue or CLIs in general for sale or license.

the best of my knowledge at this time, these network operating systems are only employed on products such as routers, switches, and others products. Therefore, in this sense there is strictly speaking no independent "market" for the copyrights-at-issue in which harm may have occurred. 75,76 The only product market that may be examined in this case is the market for equipment employing the network operating system of which the CLI commands at issue are a part.

- 2) The CLI commands at issue represent only a small part of the switching products in which they are (or are allegedly) employed.
 - a. Switches of the type at issue in this case embody a large number of functional features, of which the CLI commands are only one.

Cisco's and Arista's switches comprise hardware and software, each offering a multitude of distinguishable features. For example, the current data sheet for Cisco's Nexus 9300-EX Platform Switches provides information on the following hardware features:⁷⁷

⁷⁵ Recognizing the term "market" may be defined differently for other purposes.

⁷⁶ I note in this context that at least one court has stated, "[I]t is sensible that a particular unauthorized use should be considered 'more fair' when there is no ready market or means to pay for the use, while such an unauthorized use should be considered 'less fair' when there is a ready market or means to pay for the use. The vice of circular reasoning arises only if the availability of payment is conclusive against fair use." Princeton Univ. Press v. Mich. Document Servs., Inc., 99 F.3d 1381, 1387-1388 (6th Cir. 1996).

On its website Cisco indicates that its Nexus 9000 Series switches "include vast switch-level and fabric-level software-defined networking and programmability features." Cisco's IOS services and features include several core system services and application attributes, which in turn each contain their own group of system services. According to a Cisco White Paper on IOS/ENA, these services and features include the following:⁷⁹

Cisco IOS/ENA Services and Features

Routing & Switching Technology	Infrastructure	Application Attributes
Management Services	Network Services	Performance
Traffic Management	Packet Services	Scalability

	OS Services
	Microkernal Services
	Library Services
	File Services

I understand there are many sub-services and features that underlie these general categories. As discussed further in report Section IV.B below, available evidence indicates that CLIs are sometimes (but not always) identified among dozens of discrete features discussed in customer RFPs⁸⁰ for switches of the type at issue.

b. CLI commands are only one portion of Cisco's IOS.

I understand from discussions with Mr. Black and from certain Cisco documents that the CLI commands are only one component of Cisco's IOS. As illustrated in Figure 7 above, the Cisco IOS core features and services include Management, Forwarding, Network, Component, and OS services as well as application attributes of Performance, Scalability, High Availability, and Security.⁸¹ Within each of these core features and services are groups of primary components that cover more specific features. According to a Cisco White Paper, the CLI is one of multiple sub-components that interact with other components of the operating system.⁸²

c. The allegedly infringed CLI commands are a small portion of the total CLI commands in Cisco's and Arista's software.

I understand that approximately 514 CLI commands currently appear to be at issue in this case. I further understand from Mr. Black that Arista's EOS contains approximately 13,000 to 14,000 CLI commands.⁸⁴ Therefore, the CLI commands at issue represent less than 5% of ⁸¹ CSI-CLI-01841322 at 333-334.

⁸³ Id. at 335.

⁸⁴ Conversation with John Black. Consistent with this, Arista corporate representative Adam Sweeney testified that the current version of Arista's EOS operating system has between ten thousand and twenty thousand CLI commands. See 30(b)(6) Deposition of Adam Sweeney, May 13, 2016, p. 140 (Rough).

the CLI commands used for Arista's switches. As stated earlier, the CLI commands at issue similarly represent less than 5% of those used for Cisco's switches.

d. The source code related to the allegedly infringed CLI commands is not at issue.

As stated in Section III of this report, I understand the copyrights-at-issue do not relate to the implementation of the CLI, which is executed by underlying source code not in dispute in this matter. Thus, I understand that there is no allegation that Arista copied any of Cisco's source code. Rather, with respect to CLI commands used with Arista's EOS software, I understand that Cisco alleges that EOS recognizes approximately 514 of the same CLI commands or command fragments that Cisco's software recognizes.

B. Use of the CLI commands as alleged is not sufficient to create a direct substitute for Cisco's switches, in either a technical or marketing sense. Cisco's own competitive documents make little mention of CLI commands but frequently cite a number of alternative reasons for losing business to Arista and others.

As stated in Section III of this report, I understand that in considering whether and to what extent the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work has been or may be harmed, courts will often consider whether the defendant's use amounts to mere duplication of the entirety of the original such that it clearly supersedes the object of the original and serves as a market replacement for it.⁸⁵ In this case it is evident that the alleged infringement of the copyrights-at-issue is not and would not be sufficient to duplicate or create a market replacement for the Cisco switches employing the CLIs.

1. Use of the CLIs at issue as alleged is not sufficient to "supersede the object of the original" in technical terms. Despite the alleged infringement, Cisco's IOS and Arista's EOS cannot operate interchangeably, whether because of the CLIs or otherwise.

I understand that one measure of market harm is the substitutability of the copyrighted product and the alleged infringing product. In this case, the CLI commands have no value without the associated software code which causes the networking equipment to perform a vast number of tasks based on the relevant instructions. This code associated with either the Arista CLI or the EOS software as a whole, has thus far not been at issue in this matter. I understand from discussion with Mr. Black that the two companies' operating systems cannot be substituted for one another: an Arista EOS will not work on a Cisco switch, nor will a Cisco IOS work on an Arista switch.

- 2. Customers for Cisco and Arista switches base decisions on features other than the CLI commands at issue - either entirely, or almost entirely in that "Cisco-like" or "Industry Standard" CLIs are one feature among many preferred or required of a switching product.
 - Customers typically consider a great many features in deciding which switch to purchase.

One indicator of the features, attributes and functionalities that customers seek is the information found in a customer's RFP. Customers send that information to vendors such as Arista or Cisco to outline their needs. This permits vendors to bid competitively. RFPs may be informative regarding what drives customer demand to the extent that they identify the features and functionalities that customers seek and, in some cases, how these are prioritized. As part of my analysis, I reviewed a variety of initial RFPs that Arista or Cisco received from potential customers. ⁸⁶ These RFPs identify dozens of features, apart from the CLI, that customers requested in Ethernet switches.

In addition to RFPs, other Cisco documents acknowledge that Arista's products are differentiated by a host of non-CLI related features. These documents indicate that Arista's products included critical or desirable features or services that Cisco failed to deliver.

188

Industry participants and analysts acknowledge that Arista's products may offer significant feature advantages in competition with Cisco products; among these feature advantages, "industry standard" or "Cisco-like" CLI is rarely included.

Further, Cisco's own documents seldom refer to the company's CLI as a competitive factor.

⁸⁶ See, e.g. ARISTANDCA12905565, p. 3 and

⁸⁸

b. Customer preferences and priorities regarding CLIs vary. Some types of customers are not focused on CLIs (in some cases not at all), while for other customers CLIs are a "check box" item but not a differentiator between competitors.

While it is clear that customers vary considerably in the value they attribute to a particular CLI structure, I have seen no evidence to date that any sale was driven solely or primarily by the use of specific CLI commands.

c. Cisco's own documents show it has lost business to Arista and others for reasons wholly unrelated to CLIs.

I have now reviewed a quantity of Cisco documents analyzing why it lost or risked losing business in competitive situations with Arista and others. CLIs generally are seldom mentioned and, when mentioned, are one of many Arista product advantages and are assigned no particular priority by Cisco. I have yet to see any note taken of the specific CLI commands at issue, other than in legal documents related to the case.

Many Cisco documents indicate business lost or at risk due to a number of functional and service performance factors entirely unrelated to CLIs.

Solution 193 Chief among the factors that customers are noted as valuing are latency, programmability, high density, features and responsiveness, reliability, and customer support, but many others are mentioned.

i. Latency

¹⁰⁰ Id. Testimony from the key Bank of America decision-maker, Jeffrey Birnbaum, confirmed this fact, and further confirmed that the CLI played almost no role in the decision. See Deposition of Jeffrey Birnbaum, May 17, 2016, p. 44.

ii. Programmability

Another key differentiating factor of Arista's product offering has been the fact that it is highly programmable at all layers, including the Linux kernel, hardware forwarding tables, switch configuration and CLI, switch control plan and management layer. ¹⁰⁴ The programmability offered by Arista's products has been a major selling point to customers as the networking industry has moved toward software-defined networking ("SDN"). The open nature of these products allows for the "rapid integration of a wide range of third-party applications for virtualization, management, automation, orchestration and network services." ¹⁰⁵ It is clear that customers valued the open nature of Arista's product offerings – a fact that Cisco readily acknowledged – and in some cases selected Arista as a vendor on this basis.

iii. High density

Another selling point of Arista's products has been the high port density of many Arista switches. Port density refers to the number of ports available on a single switch, and is of considerable importance to many customers – including large enterprise clients – due to the fact that high density switches make the best use of the limited physical space and power constraints. 109

iv. Innovative features and responsiveness to customer requests

 $^{^{109}\} https://waveiceku.wordpress.com/tag/port-density/.$

"124

v. Product reliability

vi. Customer support

vii. CLI features

It therefore appears that even when the focus is narrowed to CLIs, Arista has offered advantages over Cisco.

- C. Cisco has encouraged and promoted the support of its CLI commands and structure as an industry standard.
 - 1. Support of "Cisco-like CLIs" is widespread in the relevant market and is not confined to Arista.
 - a. The terms "Cisco-like CLIs" and "industry standard CLIs" may be used interchangeably. They are not precise terms of art, but imply some degree of substantial overlap with Cisco CLI commands.

Certain documents, including, for example, RFPs, use the terms "industry standard CLIs" or "Cisco-like CLIs." Based on my review of the documents and discussion with Mr. Seifert, these terms indicate that CLI commands and structures will have a "look and feel" similar to that used by Cisco and most others in the industry, generally with some substantial number of overlapping commands. For example, I understand that—even looking only at the approximately 514 commands and command fragments allegedly copied by Arista, and ignoring the thousands of other Cisco CLI commands, where there may also be overlap with other vendors: 144

- Adtran: At least 178 commands overlap
- Alcatel and Alcatel-Lucent: At least 138 commands overlap
- Brocade: At least 242 commands overlap
- D-Link: At least 305 commands overlap
- Dell: At least 268 commands overlap
- Edge-Core: At least 223 commands overlap
- Extreme and Enterasys: At least 111 commands overlap
- Foundry: At least 163 commands overlap
- HP: At least 128 commands overlap
- IBM (now Lenovo): At least 106 commands overlap
- Juniper (JUNOSe-based routers): At least 218 commands overlap
- Netgear: At least 169 commands overlap
- Oracle/Sun Microsystems: At least 120 commands overlap
- Procket Networks: At least 103 commands overlap

These figures likely underestimate (and may substantially underestimate) the overlap between other vendors' CLIs and Cisco's, because they count only the overlap that is a subset of the approximately 514 commands and command fragments allegedly copied by Arista, which comprises only a small part of Cisco's whole CLI. It is also important to note that where a command is not present in another vendor's CLI, that vendor may not support the feature or features corresponding to that command—in other words, the vendor may use no command for that feature because it does not offer the feature, as opposed to using a different command.

¹⁴³ Conversation with William Seifert.

¹⁴⁴ Expert Report of William Seifert, June 3, 2016.

Arista acknowledges that it supports certain CLI commands that are also supported by Cisco. For example, an Arista presentation refers to the EOS CLI feature as the "Industry Standard CLI' that is considered a "Common CLI tool." It is worth noting that numerous other industry participants also promote their support of "industry standard" CLIs that overlap with Cisco's.

Since the 1990s, Cisco has known it supports CLI commands also support by other industry participants. As these companies entered the market in the 1990s and into the 2000s, they highlighted to customers that engineers could use commands of the type they had been trained to use previously on Cisco products.

I understand that at least the following industry participants support and promote CLI commands that are the same as or similar to Cisco's.

- Dell has referred to an "industry-standard CLI" among the features listed on the specification sheet for its Ethernet switches. Dell highlights that its "Dell Networking OS 9" software features a "fully compliant, industry-standard CLI [that] allows certified engineers to be productive from day one and helps you protect training investments."146 Gavin Cato, Vice President of Development and Engineering at Dell, testified that Dell is aware of the CLI command overlap with any vendor "that uses that same industry standard" and that the company generally markets to its customers that it supports "an industry-standard CLI." Mr. Cato also listed Arista, Juniper, Extreme Networks, and Enterasys as examples of vendors that "use the industry-standard CLI [commands]." ¹⁴⁷
- In making a presentation on the viability of its software management solutions, HP emphasized its products' "ease of migration and leveraging existing knowledge," including incorporation of industry-standard commands. HP has created a guidebook to match and highlight the overlap between the Cisco and HP ProVision CLI commands, as illustrated in the figure below: 148

- Netgear markets its M4200 switch series as featuring an "[i]ndustry standard command line interface (CLI) for IT admins used to other vendors commands."154

Preliminary analysis indicated that of the "500 multi-word commands" that Cisco alleges Arista has "unlawfully copied," over 200 commands are supported by one or more of the following vendors: Adtran, Alcatel-Lucent, Allied Telesis, Brocade, D-Link, Dell, Foundry, HP, Juniper, Netgear, Procket Networks, Extreme Networks, IBM, F5 Networks, and others.¹⁵⁵ I understand this analysis is ongoing.

c. Cisco distributes its CLI commands for use by non-Cisco CLI vendor industry participants

On June 17, 2014 Cisco announced it was acquiring Tail-f Systems ("Tail-f"), a software supplier that provides multi-vendor orchestration software for traditional and virtualized networks.¹⁵⁷ Cisco continues to sell Tail-f's two network management products, Network Control System ("NCS", rebranded as "NSO") and ConfD, which allow network operators to utilize various CLI-styles on different networking devices, among other capabilities. 158

The NCS/NSO software allows companies to easily implement network solutions across a variety of networking devices and multiple vendors using a variety of CLI styles (including Cisco-style and Juniper-style). 159,160 According to Cisco Technical Leader, Cons T Åhs. "NSO uses standardized interfaces on the devices it manages" and is "essentially a large service written on top of ConfD", Tail-f's other product offering. 161

Cisco currently offers a premium version of ConfD that supports three types of command line interfaces: Cisco IOS-XR style, Cisco IOS style and Juniper style. 165

Cisco's offer and sale of a product that allows its competitors' customers to use Cisco or "Cisco-like" CLIs to configure and communicate with non-Cisco switches appears to be perpetuating widespread use of its CLI commands on non-Cisco switches, which utilize non-IOS operating systems. The logical conclusion is that Cisco either recognizes that the use of its CLI commands on non-Cisco switches does not harm the market for its copyrighted work, or it is itself abetting that harm.

2. Cisco has promoted the support of its CLI commands and CLI structure as a de facto industry standard.

There are many benefits to standardization in the networking industry. 166 Standardization can:

- Allow equipment made by different companies to work together
- Provide a base level of known quality for some aspects of operation
- Provide an indication of performance expectation
- Accelerate and reduce the cost of innovation

Cisco states the benefits of standardization include higher bandwidth and open connectivity¹⁶⁷ and credits standardization for the success of the Industrial Ethernet, as it allows different manufacturers to consolidate their network architecture by using a variety of equipment vendors and allows companies to take advantage of economies of scale while still providing flexibility. 168

Cisco further detailed the benefits of standards to network operators and connected users, claiming standards:169

- Simplify and shorten the pilot phase of networking
- Enable ready and accurate installations and upgrades
- Streamline ongoing maintenance and administration
- Speed diagnostics and reduce repair times
- Bolster the reliability of connections and exchanges
- Help ensure integrity of connections and connected resources •
- Extend network reach and ease network use
- Heighten technical and business flexibility
- Lower capital and operating expenses
- Promote vendor independence and product availability

Cisco itself has long described its CLIs and CLI structure not as "proprietary" but as "industry standard." A Cisco product datasheet referencing use of the Cisco IOS Software dated March 7, 2006 stated:170

"Customer can use the industry-standard Cisco IOS Software command-line interface (CLI) or user-friendly graphical user interface (GUI) to configure and administer Cisco Unified CallManager Express."

¹⁶⁶ http://www.teach-ict.com/as_a2_ict_new/ocr/A2_G063/333_networks_coms/standards/miniweb/pg5.htm.

Cisco also created several white papers for the Cisco IOS that discussed the "industry-standard" nature of the command-line interface. For example, Cisco white papers for the Cisco IOS XR 2.0 and 3.0 releases both promoted the CLI as industry standard to its customers: 171

"Cisco IOS XR Software manageability provides industry-standard management interfaces, including modular command-line interface, Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP), and native Extensible Markup Language (XML) interfaces."

Industry analysts have also noted that the Cisco IOS is considered a de facto industry standard used by numerous vendors:172

"Cisco IOS is the most popular CLI look and feel for talking to networking devices. Its enormous success has made it the de facto standard in the networking industry. Many vendors simply cloned it to avoid training new operational methods during the product introduction cycle."

Arista CEO Jayshree Ullal is former Senior Vice President of Data Center Switching and Services of Cisco. She has testified in deposition that both during her tenure at Cisco and after her departure, Cisco regarded its CLIs as an industry standard for which it encouraged broad adoption and widespread use. 173 Likewise, Andreas Bechtolsheim, former Cisco General Manager of the Gigabit Switching Business Unit, testified that he recalled a meeting in which Cisco business unit heads discussed other switch vendors' use of Cisco's CLI, and decided to take no action. 174

3. Cisco is still the overwhelming market leader for the routers and switches that use the IOS operating system and the CLIs that operate therein. Cisco does not appear to have been harmed by widespread support of its CLI commands and, in fact, may benefit from their support as "industry standards."

As shown in Figure 1, Cisco is still the overwhelming market share leader for Ethernet switches of all types, despite the widespread use of the same or similar CLI commands by competitors. Cisco's market share for High-Speed Ethernet Data Center Switches, the product market subsegment in which it competes most closely with Arista, is over six times higher than that of its closest competitor, Arista. Cisco's market share for total Ethernet Switches is similarly over six times higher than the closest competitor, HP. There is currently no evidence of any correlation between market share and the extent to which a company's CLI commands overlap with Cisco's. For example, while I understand Mr. Black's current analysis shows Dell has well over 1,000 overlapping commands with Cisco, ¹⁷⁵ Dell's market share for High-Speed Ethernet Data Center Switches is the lowest of the major switch competitors.

In fact, the value of the CLI commands to Cisco is likely enhanced by their adoption as "industry standard." Such adoption effectively "locks in" the Cisco model, discouraging competitors from developing new and potentially superior methods of effecting the same results. Even when Cisco loses sales to competitors based on performance, price and other factors, engineers continue to become familiar with Cisco's command style. In addition, Cisco continues to maintain the "bragging rights" of having developed the "industry standard," augmenting its continuing position as market leader. ¹⁷⁶

D. There is no way to distinguish any loss or harm to Cisco's market that may be argued as caused by Arista's, as opposed to other competitors', support of CLI commands of the type at issue in this case.

All of the above notwithstanding, if Cisco's copyrights have suffered or are likely to suffer harm in the marketplace, there is no apparent means of separating any harm caused by Arista from harm caused by the numerous other participants who have supported "Cisco-like" CLI commands and marketed their products as employing "industry standard" or "Cisco-like" CLIs. Simply identifying sales lost by Cisco to Arista is not sufficient to support an assumption that Arista's alleged infringement (the use of a limited number of CLI commands) was the cause of those losses, given: 1) the complexity of the products, 2) the lack of evidence that CLI commands were a driver or predominant driver of customer demand, and 3) the number of other competitors also marketing "industry standard" CLIs without objection from Cisco.

¹⁷⁶ Conversation with William Seifert.

Conclusion

Based on the totality of evidence I have reviewed to date, I have concluded there is no reasonable and reliable evidence of harm to Cisco's ability to exploit the market for the portions of its copyrights at issue in this case as they are currently understood (referenced throughout as "CLI commands" for brevity). In order to address this fourth fair use factor, I specifically looked to determine the following, among other things:

- 1) Any evidence of Arista's alleged use of the copyrights causing significant harm to Cisco's market for the original work, and
- 2) Whether "unrestricted and widespread" use by others would adversely affect the potential market for the original work.

There is no independent market for the CLI commands at issue or for the network operating software of which they are only one component. This network operating software is itself only a part of the switch products for which Cisco and Arista compete. These switches are themselves only a part of the total Ethernet switch market, which is in turn only a part of the market for switches, routers and other products in which the CLI commands are used by Cisco. Arista's alleged infringing use is therefore very minor and far removed from the majority of Cisco's sales and profits for products employing its CLIs, to the extent this may be deemed to constitute a relevant "market for the original work."

Moreover, a significant quantity of documents, including Cisco's own internal documents and publicly available information, indicate that customers choose High-Speed Ethernet Data Center switches based on a number of performance features, including but not limited to latency, programmability, port density, features and responsiveness, reliability, and customer support. These factors are unrelated to specific CLI commands. Those commands are, at most, a single feature among dozens that may be preferred (but not prioritized) by some customers. In particular, Cisco documents clearly demonstrate business lost or at risk to Arista for reasons unrelated to CLIs, and conversely fail to demonstrate a belief that Arista's CLIs are or were a reason for its sales.

Numerous companies in addition to Arista have employed "Cisco-like" or "industry standard" CLIs. Cisco itself uses the term "industry standard" to describe its own CLI and this equivalency is well recognized in the market. The terms "Cisco-like" and "industry standard" in this respect are not exact but indicate only that the operating software in question will share some number of CLI commands with Cisco's. The use of "Cisco-like" CLIs by other competitors is well known in the industry and by Cisco, which has allowed it to continue. Therefore, "unrestricted and widespread use" has already occurred and continues to occur by parties in the market. Cisco's historic and continued promotion of its CLI as the de facto industry standard has likely enhanced its position in the market, not harmed it.

Further, this widespread use notwithstanding, Cisco continues to maintain an overwhelming majority share of the market for Ethernet Switches, leading its next most successful competitors by several multiples. To this evidence of Cisco's continued ability to exploit the market for its copyright-at-issue must be added its billions of dollars in sales of routers and other products using IOS and NX-OS with which Arista does not even compete. In sum, Arista's alleged use of the CLI commands has not been, nor could it be, sufficient to create "mere duplication of the entirety of the [Cisco] original such that it clearly supersedes the object of the original and serves as a market replacement for it," either in a technical or marketing sense.

CATE ELSTEN CURRICULUM VITAE

June 2016

Cate Elsten is a Managing Director for Ocean Tomo, an integrated intellectual property consulting firm providing financial products and services including expert testimony, valuation, investments, risk management and transactions.

Ms. Elsten has been a consultant since 1990. She was a Principal for Tait Advisory Services and led that firm's Intellectual Property Practice prior to its acquisition by Ocean Tomo. Before joining Tait, Ms. Elsten was a Partner in PricewaterhouseCoopers' Financial Advisory Services Practice, working with intellectual property of all types and serving as National Director for Trademark and Copyright matters. Ms. Elsten worked in industry for twelve years before beginning her consulting career and held management positions for companies including Playhouse Square Center, Dayton-Hudson Corporation's Target Stores Division (now Target Corporation), Aveda Corporation (now a division of Estée Lauder) and Sign Consultants, Inc.

Ms. Elsten has provided services including expert testimony, valuation and licensing, strategic and operational consulting for companies in a wide range of industries, including biotechnology, software, medical devices and equipment, high-tech and traditional manufacturing, agriculture and food processing, pharmaceuticals, financial services, retail, hospitality, telecommunications, media and entertainment. She has testified on issues informing economic damages, marketing and industry trends, licensing and management practices, corporate and intellectual asset valuations and plans of reorganization in depositions, trials, arbitrations, bankruptcy courts and other settings. She has also served as an AAA arbitrator.

Ms. Elsten is a Certified Management Accountant and a Certified Licensing Professional. She is a member of the International Trademark Association, the Licensing Executives Society and the American Marketing Association. She served three consecutive terms on the editorial board of The Trademark Reporter and on the Board of Governors for the Brand Name Education Foundation. She has lectured on a variety of intellectual property topics for the Los Angeles and Orange County Patent Lawyers Associations, Minnesota Institute of Legal Education, Institute for International Research, International Business Forum and other professional organizations and universities.
